The following are extracts from the Bulletin of 1863;

Jan. 3, 1863—Reports are received of a great Union victory at Mufreesboro near Nashville, Tenn., in a three day's engagement. It was one of the most ferocious battles of modern times, sustained by both sides with great determination. The Union army was under Gen. Rosencrans, with about 45,000 men and 100 pieces of artillery. The fight Wednesday lasted 11 hours with varying success, Gen. Rosencrans himself leading his men repeatedly. Our casualties reached about 1,500. Thursday morning Gen. Rosencrans determined to begin the attack. At 11 o'clock matters were not flattering on either side. At 12 o'clock our batteries received new supplies of ammunition and were messed and a terrific fire begun. The enemy began to give way, Gen. Thomas bressing on their center, and Gen. Crittenden advancing on their left. Later Gen. Thomas broke the rebel center and Gen. Crittenden took the rebel entrenchments on the left.

The late instance of tug Lehigh The late instance of tug Lehigh grounding with three barges, when tug and all of the barges were gotten off with practically no damage, is a piece of luck which the mariners cannot explain satisfactorily. On the strength of this mishap, the Lehigh Valley railroad, owning the vessels, has taken the matter up with determination to show the lighthouse board the urgency of equipping the station with better navigation aids.
